

We welcome you to join us for the NLN Clinical Focus Group on Clinical Practice Barriers facilitated by Bethany Beckwith OTR/L, CLT-LANA.

Bethany is a graduate student who seeks to understand practice barriers that lymphedema therapists experience in the American healthcare system. Please join her to discuss various patient, clinical, and systematic challenges implementing complete decongestive therapy. Together, we will explore how these challenges are being navigated in practice and how the NLN may be able to provide further support. All lymphedema therapists of varying settings, geographic location, and discipline are welcome.

We encourage submission of questions or topics for discussion via email at continuingeducation@lymphnet.org.

Please Note: There is a limit of 15 participants for this meeting.

These are not recorded, therefore they are not accessible at a later date.

Bethany Beckwith graduated from Ithaca College with her Master's Degree in Occupational therapy in 2012 and was certified by the Academy of Lymphatic Studies in Complete Decongestive therapy in 2015. Since that time, she has been serving the southern tier region of upstate New York at UHS Binghamton General Hospital. Bethany's passion is advocacy and developing pathways for early diagnosis and treatment of lymphedema. Along with a breast cancer rehabilitation program, she has worked to develop and implement a head and neck cancer rehabilitation program at her hospital system. Currently Bethany is a post-professional student in the University of Pittsburgh Doctor of Clinical Science in Occupational Therapy program. She has a special interest in practice barriers and implementation of CDT in the clinical setting.
